On a foggy Sunday morning we gathered at the bus station in Mölle. The optimists in the group hoped that the sun would break through so that we would be able to take nice pictures on the way up the mountain Kullaberg. Around 15 happy and excited walkers showed up – some of them had travelled all the way from Malmö, Båstad and Helsingborg to join the walk. And no wonder – Kullaberg is one of the most beautiful stretches of Kullaleden! In the lighthouse at the top of Kullaberg we would meet Per Sjögren, alias Kullamannen?, with fika and exciting stories. Per, who is a real enthusiast, offers guided tours of the lighthouse (which by the way had 80,000 visitors last summer).

After gathering we started our way towards the harbour of Mölle and further on to the beach in Solviken and then we walked the path along the mountain to Ransvik. Here we made a short stop before it was time to start the climb up to the first hill. The top of the hill is marked with a bench and whole no 8 on the Mölle golf club. Could it be the most beautiful golf hole in Sweden?

Time to go into the forest again and soon we came to the first pen and the path goes upwards again. Here stop for a fika break by the old fur tree which is often seen on photos of Kullaberg. We agree that the fog makes the landscape even more enchanting and exciting. When you don’t scout for the Danish coastline anymore, you experience the nature around us even deeper. We pass the pen without meeting any cows, but on our way into the next pen we see them. Look straight forward and walk on, we have been told. The animals are used to walkers seeing thousands of them every year, but they look curious nevertheless.

Now we are getting nearer the lighthouse that becomes more and more visible. When we arrive the “Kullamannen” invites us for fresh cinnamon rolls (as it happened this was the “Day of the Cinnamon Roll” – Kanelbullens dag). On our way up the beautiful squiggly stairs of the lighthouse we can see pictures and information from old times, for example on the group of people who built the lighthouse.

Outside the windows we see porpoises playing around in the water below the lighthouse. We could also clearly see the border between the two seas that meet there (Kattegatt and Skagerack).

The walk was now over and we got a ride down to Mölle again.
